

NACCW:

National Association of Child Care Workers

NACCW is a South African non-profit association for the child health and development. They want to improve protection, care and treatment of the youth and especially of the orphaned children.

Promoting Child Welfare:

The NACCW has been at the forefront of child welfare in South Africa since its establishment in 1985.

The organization works tirelessly to protect the rights of children, especially those from disadvantaged backgrounds or facing various challenges. Through its network of child care workers, the NACCW provides crucial support and guidance to children, ensuring they have access to education, healthcare, and a nurturing environment.

Promoting Child Welfare:

The NACCW has been at the forefront of child welfare in South Africa since its establishment in 1985.

The organization works tirelessly to protect the rights of children, especially those from disadvantaged backgrounds or facing various challenges. Through its network of child care workers, the NACCW provides crucial support and guidance to children, ensuring they have access to education, healthcare, and a nurturing environment.

Director :
Merle Allsopp

Empowering Child Care Workers:

Recognizing the importance of well-trained and skilled child care workers, the NACCW focuses on empowering professionals in the field. The organization offers comprehensive training programs, workshops, and resources to enhance the knowledge and skills of child care workers. By equipping these individuals with the necessary tools, the NACCW aims to improve the quality of care provided to children across the country.

Community-Based Approach:

One of the key strengths of the NACCW is its community-based approach. The organization believes in working closely with local communities, understanding their unique needs, and developing tailored solutions. By collaborating with community leaders, schools, and social services, the NACCW ensures that its initiatives are culturally sensitive, sustainable, and aligned with the specific challenges faced by each community.

Preventing Child Abuse and Neglect:

Child abuse and neglect remain persistent challenges in South Africa. The NACCW plays a crucial role in preventing and addressing these issues. Through awareness campaigns, training programs, and advocacy, the organization strives to educate communities about child protection and ensure the early identification and reporting of abuse cases. Additionally, the NACCW provides support services to children who have experienced abuse, helping them on their path to healing and recovery.

By Heurtaux Néo, Payrau Maël, Tixier Raphaël,
Charmensat Nègre Augustin